

300 RAILROADS ARE AFFECTED BY STRIKE VOTE

Independent Unions Ballot Unanimously For Halt In Their Work

(Continued from Page One) Council (CIO) members voted last night to call upon CIO president Philip Murray to discuss "a general strike, if necessary" to protest picket line violence in which 17 persons were injured yesterday.

Mounted and motorcycle police broke the ranks of 3,000 massed CIO strikers around the General Electric Co. yesterday in the second straight day of labor warfare in Philadelphia. Later, 10,000 workers marched on city hall in a mass demonstration.

An announcement that negotiations would be resumed in the threatened telephone strike came last night after union representatives had indicated that discussions had been broken off.

U. S. Conciliator H. R. Caldwell said representatives of the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. and the Independent Long Lines union would meet Sunday. Conciliator Director Edgar L. Warren indicated in Washington that a fact-finding board would be appointed in the dispute if negotiations failed.

In other labor developments, President Truman's steel fact-finding board reported that the 18½ cent settlement for the industry's wage dispute was "well within" the limits set by government policy.

Industry Charges Denied The board's report also denied industry charges that the recent steel strike was a violation of the union's contract.

The report was made public shortly after CIO steelworkers' headquarters in Pittsburgh disclosed that some 350,000 workers still were idle in more than 600 companies as a result of the union's wage strike which began Jan. 21.

The workers are employed largely by small processors and fabricators which have refused to grant the 18½-cent hourly increase accepted by the big producers.

PHYSICIANS HEAR SHANE Dr. E. S. Shane, Circleville physician who recently returned from service with the Navy, was the principal speaker at a monthly luncheon meeting of the Pickaway County Medical Society, Friday noon, in the Betz Restaurant.

to take Terry home. She said she had no intention of kidnapping the child but was "scared" because she had "been gone so long."

Terry Unconcerned
Terry awaited the arrival of her parents at the home of police commissioner Thomas G. Basil. She cried only once and that was when they tried to separate her from Miss Johnson at bedtime. The nursemaid was returned and Terry stopped crying.

Miss Johnson variously identified herself as Rosemary McKay of Decatur, Ill., Geraldine Ann Greene of Topeka, Kan., and Rosemary Johnson. She had been working at Annapolis as Rosemary McKay.

She said the chain of events which led her to Annapolis began last Tuesday when she took Terry and her five-and-a-half year old sister, Tondra, for a walk in a Charlotte park on her day off.

During the walk, she said, she asked a soldier how to get to a drug store and he offered to drive her. She asked the children if they wanted to go along and Terry did.

Jaunt Described
Instead of going to the drug store the soldier drove her and Terry to a spot near Richmond where he put her on a bus for Washington after arranging to meet her there. She admitted the soldier "bugged" her but said he had not kissed her.

Miss Johnson said she did not meet the soldier but decided to come to Annapolis because she had heard "it was easy to get work" here. A minister sent her to the Seay home where she obtained a job as cook.

Sheriff J. J. Underwood said Gordon suddenly seized a gun from the floor and opened fire, wounding Deputy Sheriff R. T. Darnell. The gun was one of more than 400 weapons stacked in the office which had been confiscated here in a house-to-house firearms check.

Other police, hearing the firing, dashed in and shot Gordon and Johnson.

NEGLECT CITED IN MRS. RAPP'S DIVORCE ACTION

Mrs. Helen Rapp, 216 W. Mound street, filed suit for divorce in Pickaway County Common Pleas Court, Friday, accusing Pearl Raymond Rapp of gross neglect of duty.

The Rapps were married Sept. 30, 1944 at Portsmouth and are childless.

Mrs. Rapp claims that ever since the marriage her husband has "refused" to support her properly and that she has been compelled to depend upon her own efforts and the charity of relatives and friends.

Mrs. Rapp also asks for possession of their household goods and that she be restored to her former name, Helen Young.

parents and the public in general it added," it declared.

The report made 22 specific recommendations to remedy these "deficiencies." Most of them were technical and minor in character.

One urged that Veterans Administrator Omar N. Bradley be given the authority to fire and hire medical personnel without regard to the civil service qualifications. (Under a law recently enacted, Bradley already has been given that authority.)

The report also said military titles and uniforms be barred in veterans hospitals. It recommended that the veterans administration should train its own psychiatrists and provide out-patient treatment for veterans with minor mental disorders.

It added that the hospitals should install the most modern medical equipment for the care and treatment of neuropsychiatric and tubercular patients, and should conduct a vigorous research program to improve the manufacture and use of artificial limbs.

In the interest of that peace, he warned that "the United States cannot allow its military establishment to be reduced below the point required to maintain a position commensurate with our responsibilities and that is why we must have some form of universal military training."

It is our responsibility, he added, to see that other powers live up to the government of the United Nations and we intend to meet that responsibility.

He said the United States wishes to maintain friendly relations with all nations and exclusive arrangements with none.

"We have openly, gladly and wholeheartedly welcomed our Soviet ally as a great power, second to none in the family of the United Nations—only an inexcusable tragedy of errors could cause serious conflict between us in the future," he said.

"We must live by the charter. That is the only road to peace."

DIVORCE GIVEN TO MRS. GLITT; ASSETS DIVIDED

Mrs. Lucille Glitt was awarded a divorce from Joseph Glitt by Judge Emmitt L. Crist, Friday in Pickaway County Common Pleas Court, on grounds of extreme cruelty.

The couple was married Feb. 15, 1933. The court approved a separation agreement under which the couple's real and personal property was divided. Mrs. Glitt was restored to her maiden name, Lucille Howard.

Roundtown Merchants Bow 46-35 In Playoff Finale; Ignition Five Loses

Williams A. C. copped the City League championship Thursday night by winning the playoff series at Roll and Bowl. The final score was 46-35.

Inability of the Merchant five to play consistent ball cost them the league title.

Merchants Held Down
The Merchants quintet started out to make the contest a runaway. They held the Roundtowners scoreless until just before the end of the first quarter. They tallied 8 points in this period and the Merchants got only one point, a foul shot near the close of the first stanza.

The Roundtown five came to life in the second stanza scoring 17 points to 8 for Williams and led at the halftime intermission 18 to 15. A fast break and a tight defense all over the court was used to build up this lead in the second quarter by the Merchants.

The third canto was evenly played with the Merchants netting 11 points and Williams 13. The score at the end of the session was 29-28 in favor of Roundtown Merchants.

During the final quarter the attack of the first half winners completely bogged down as they tallied only 6 points as against a total of 18 for Williams.

Gulick Paves Way
Harold Gulick led the way for the Williams five by stripping the nets for 19 points. "Snapper" Ankrom, outstanding Williams star, added 14 markers to be runnerup for his team.

Russ Gregg was the high point man for the Merchants coming through with 14 points followed by Ted Moon with 8.

In the preliminary contest Kelly's Bar of Dayton eked out a 40-37 win over Columbus Ignition.

The smaller Columbus quintet led through most of the contest, but had to give way to the superior height and drive of the Kelly team.

Curt Atkinson, big Kelly forward dropped in 19 points to lead

OLD JUDGE: "How do you use them, Hank?"

DRIVER FINED $5

John L. Fletcher was fined $5 by Mayor Ben H. Gordon Thursday for directing a spot light to the left side of the highway while driving on Route 23, north of Circleville. Fletcher was arrested Thursday by State Patrolman Charles Curran.

The scorers, Harry Haywood, six-foot five inch Kelly center came through with 10 points for the winners.

Fletcher Paces Ignition
Fletcher, flashy Ignition forward was top man for his club with a total of 12 counters. He was followed by Williams and Crooks with 8 points each.

The two contests ended league and post-league play. A banquet scheduled for participating teams of the league has been cancelled due to the shortage of funds.

The Industrial loop was operated at a loss for the most part of season. It is not known whether another league will be operated next season, due to the poor support of this year's venture.

$13,800 SOUGHT BY RED CROSS AS DRIVE OPENS

335 Volunteer Workers Open House To House Canvass Of Entire County

The 1946 fund campaign of the Pickaway County chapter of the American Red Cross got under way Friday.

The goal is $13,800 and Vaden Couch, general chairman, said the drive will end March 15. Approximately 335 volunteer solicitors are engaged in a house-to-house and store-to-store canvass of Circleville and Pickaway County, while special groups of solicitors will seek contributions from industries, utilities, fraternal organizations, and service clubs.

New Duties Added

Couch pointed out that the ending of World War II has added new duties to the American Red Cross. He said the organization is now rendering services to occupation forces, to thousands of hospitalized soldiers and sailors, and to ex-service men.

"After the cessation of hostilities in Europe", Couch said, "the need for Red Cross continuance there became abundantly clear. And in the Pacific the recreation problem for American forces is even greater than that in Europe. Few islands offer anything in the way of American-style amusement."

"Here at home, recreation and welfare services are being continued for able-bodied men in camps and naval bases, and for the thousands of hospitalized, large numbers of whom will need Red Cross attention for months."

Families Assisted

"Families of these men will find their Red Cross chapters sources of help in solving financial problems and meeting emergency situations. Red Cross chapters are continuing centers of information, consultation, and guidance in readjustment problems."

"Red Cross work with veterans is expected to show a sharp rise during the next five or six years as millions of men are discharged from the nation's armed forces."

LOST OPPORTUNITY

MOST Americans, of all parties, have been rather sympathetic with President Truman. They realized that he came into office under circumstances of the greatest difficulty. They believed he was doing the best he could. They were disposed to give him the benefit of the doubt when he seemed to be going wrong.

But he lost his great chance the other day in the Ickes-Pauley matter. Pauley may be intelligent beyond most mortals, he may be pure as the driven snow. But Americans want their Secretary of the Navy to be above suspicion. Especially they do not want him connected with large matters involving oil. So it early became plain that no matter how good Pauley might be, Americans in general did not want him running the Navy. When Truman realized that, it became the part not only of wisdom but of integrity for him to suggest to Pauley that he withdraw.

Truman could have arisen and said: "Votes be damned! I am here to do the will of the whole people and not of one party."

Had he done so, he would have earned—and gained—the respect of every American. This was his great opportunity and he let it slip.

For a President of the United States is not a boss, but the servant of the people. He must put the nation as a whole before any party.

At least that is what George Washington believed.

GOOD AT BOOKS, TO

THE veterans who licked Japs and Nazis can lick lessons as well. Mid-term reports coming from many colleges throughout the country agree in general with the announcement from the University of Rochester that the GIs there are getting better grades than the non-veterans enrolled. For instance on that university's campus, only six per cent of the former soldiers failed as compared with 13 per cent of the men who had not seen service. Several other universities report not a single failure among their soldier students. These boys learned in their military life how to attack a problem and get the work done.

It looks as if that GI Bill appropriation that enabled so many soldiers to go to school would turn out to be a paying investment for taxpayers.

Margaret Sullivan has been signed by producer Alfred De Liagre Jr. to go to London this Spring to recreate the role of Sally Middleton in "The Voice of the Turtle." The John Van Druten play is still running here and on the road. Miss Sullivan was the original favorite but she dropped out after a season.

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, March 1—The announcements said it was a "bold" program which Mr. Truman proposed for the building of 2,700,000 new houses this year and next.

It was bold enough in a way, but those who knew the inner workings—or non-workings, at present—of the building trades recognized it, with their more practised eye, as a familiar, typical program of the Roosevelt type.

It is sure-fire politically; otherwise a blunderbuss (Note: A blunderbuss is a noisy gun which does not shoot straight.)

The troubles of the great lagging construction industry are twofold: (A) prices, and (B) labor. The report of Mr. Truman's housing administrator Wilson Wyatt considered the trouble as onefold: A shortage of materials. But material scarcity is the visible reaction from the two greater, deeper causes.

Prices of materials, in general, have been held at 1941-42 levels. But building labor, in general, has had two or three raises in the war years. Producers of building materials simply could not make money, and were crushed by the pressure of increasing labor costs against a frozen price ceiling, as many another industry in this period. Not being able to make any money, these producers went out of business, curtailed unprofitable production, entered other lines, or retired to the sidelines.

I have heard of contracts for the building of roads going begging today, not because of the shortage of materials, but because no contractor can make any money from them. Incidents of this revealing nature have occurred in New York, Minnesota and other states. The contracts offered by the states, municipalities or others are founded on the 1941-42 price level, and it is impossible for any contractor to get materials or labor at those levels.

In one locality I checked, the common day labor wage, for example, is fixed at 65 cents an hour, but no builder can get common labor short of $1 an hour—approximately one-third more than the theoretical wage scale. Yet the actual wage-cost is much higher because labor has slowed down on work in the war years, and productivity per man is incalculably less.

To meet this trouble, the Truman-Wyatt plan, in basic essence, proposed to pay a premium (cash bounty) to producers of building materials out of the federal treasury, in order to induce them to go back to production. No set scheme of payment was offered. The opportunities for favoritism and politics are left open by the wide federal power to pay one producer one amount, others another. Indeed, three different brickyards in the very same city could be handled differently. A high-cost producer could get a government subsidy, a medium cost producer could make an average profit, and a low-cost producer could make a high profit without subsidies.

The theory, thus, is to transfer the farm subsidy plan to the building industry, and take the money of all the people from the federal treasury to pay to unprofitable operators in order to avoid a price increase which is justified by all the facts.

"The Authority on Authorities"

WITH A NEW PARTNER

AS TO ORIGINAL bids of three in a suit—don't make them. That is, if you have a new partner and do not know what kind of a three-bid he is accustomed to. He may be one of the old school who still thinks it is advisable to bid three on a strong suit with an ace or so on the side. Or he may be the other extreme, one of those who have learned by experience that such bids usually crowd the maker's side rather than the opposition, and that an original three bid has greatest value when used only on a hand completely worthless as to high cards, but with a long enough suit to prevent too much punishment if doubled and set.

South might consider himself an "expert" in that he knows what kind of an original three-bid the so-called experts agree is most advisable. But he surely did not qualify as even a fairly intelligent person when he made such a bid with a partner of just average ability. There is still a fair percentage of rank and file players who, like North, think an original three-bid is a strong call. South should have known of that, and therefore should have refrained from making such a bid.

After North bid the 3-No Trumps, South should have realized that his side might be in deep trouble if he bid again. If he had passed, and West doubled the 3-No Trumps, his call of 4-Hearts in that situation could not have been misread. It would not have misled North into doubling 4-Spades as he did. South decided he couldn't leave that double in. His one correct action was in taking out the double. For, even though his side got set five tricks, for a score of 900, that was not as much as the value of the doubled game vulnerable, plus an extra trick, the opponents would have got.

A JOB FOR JENNY

by Faith Baldwin

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

THE TERRACE was gray flagstone, surrounded by a clipped hedge. Hurricane candles glowed, as the sky darkened, and the long table was set with gay pottery and tall glasses. The manservant and a maid served, and Foster, the architect, drove in from Portland and joined the group. And after a while Steve came back and when he had had supper he, Foster, Mr. Hathaway and Mary vanished into the library.

Howard Morgan, sitting at one end of the table with Edie, was doggedly discussing politics and Edie was listening, bored and quiet, but looking attentive. She said yes, at proper intervals, and no, with proper astonishment and indignation, and Mr. Morgan thought her a most intelligent woman and one he could go for in a big way—not that he ever expressed himself in the current patois, even in his own thoughts—if it weren't for the fact that he was irrevocably attached to Mary Hathaway. Why, he didn't know. He was a sober, solid dull man, with a great deal of money, considerably older than Mary. He had watched her grow, fall in love and out again; he had seen her conduct herself shockingly, if with discretion, and then fall violently in love with a young man of no social or financial pretensions—some youngster she had picked up in a canteen, whose people lived God knows where and who had been a humble bank clerk before he went into the Air Forces. Morgan had suffered throughout their brief engagement, always hoping it would not last. Mary's attachments never lasted. They were brief and hot and lighted kindling wood. But the Hathaway opposition was finally conquered, and the wedding invitations sent out. They were to have been married on Pat's next leave. But before his next leave, Pat had met another girl . . . and eloped with her, on a three-day pass.

Now Howard Morgan had thought, sitting out Mary's rage and tears and misery, she will turn to me. But she hadn't. She had turned to no one until this—this country doctor came along with his war service and his crippled right hand.

He went on talking to Edie and Edie listened and watched Justice detach Jenny from her chair on the terrace and say, "Let's go look at the white garden."

The white garden was Horace Hathaway's pride. It was composed entirely of white and sweet-scented flowers, which glowed in the moonlight and made a patch of fragrant light in the darkness.

It was some distance from the house, near the rose gardens, beyond the cutting beds and the perennial beds. They stood there, under a newly risen moon, and Jenny sighed. She said sincerely, "It's so utterly lovely."

"You are, you know," he said slowly. He had been increasingly aware of her all evening. Now he put out his hand, caught hers and drew her close. She came without resistance, her heart pounding. He said—and it was an approach which rarely, if ever failed—"I know you don't like me, Jenny. And all you think of me is true. I'm no good." He laughed shortly. "And I've hurt you badly, through someone you care for—I don't expect you to forgive me . . . I don't even ask it. If I had realized—" He broke off, and held her to him, suddenly, closely, bent his tall head and kissed her.

She was passive in his arms. She did not struggle or speak. She did not respond. He said harshly, "Jenny!" and kissed her again. And she viewed herself with an enormous detachment. She thought, I don't like this man. He makes me sick. Yet there's something . . . It's as if I were kissing someone else and I was watching. The girl even likes it, a little . . . But I mind.

Up at the house, Steve came out of the library. He had promised to look in on old Mrs. Meadows before he went home. Mary followed him. She said, "But there's so much to discuss."

"I know," he said, "but I've an appointment. I must make this call, Mary."

She said, "Of course . . . I understand."

When they reached the terrace he looked around for Jenny, but she was not there. He said to Edie, "I'm shoving off . . . do you and Jenny want to come along?"

Mary said, Steve, don't break up the party, but Edie said quickly, "I think we should, Steve. . . . Only Jenny isn't here. She went off to look at the gardens with Mr. Hathaway . . ."

She hesitated a moment, then said smoothly, "Perhaps you could find her."

Mary smiled faintly in the darkness. She thought, Edie's being clever—she thinks.

Steve went off alone across the lawn. He wondered absently why Mary hadn't come with him, but she'd sat down on the arm of Howard Morgan's chair and was talking to him. Perhaps she felt that she had neglected him. Mary was a remarkable person. Her slight, almost unconscious arrogance amused him. It came of self-confidence, the confidence induced by the possession of as much security as money could buy. He liked her quick mind, her somewhat cynical outlook. He was attracted by her physically. She amused and stimulated him. She was the antithesis of so much . . . sliken and sleek, and seemingly untouched by the crumbling of their world. She wasn't particularly real, he thought, striding across the grass, reflecting idly that it must cost a fortune to keep it in this green velvet condition, in this heat. And so, exactly what he needed. He'd had all the reality he wanted, and to spare, during his service, and in his work, always conscious of his constant anxiety over his father.

If the hospital went through—and Hathaway seemed definitely interested—it would be marvelous beyond all dreams. He could feel alive again, working for something he wanted, which his father had always wanted, which the town needed. Darn the town, anyway. There was enough money in it to build a hospital, but no, the people were too apathetic, too satisfied. The Northman hospital had been good enough in their father's time, it was good enough now.

At for his hand . . . heck, he could drive a car, he could get along. He couldn't be a surgeon. Over and done with, that dream. But if they had the hospital he could expand his interests, augment his usefulness. He knew that the Hathaways would see to it that he'd become chief on medical, anyway. Perhaps he could find time for research. Next to surgery, he had always been interested in research. Allergies, he thought, there wasn't a good allergy man within a hundred miles of—

He had almost reached the moonlight garden, and he could see Justice and Jenny. He could see Jenny in Justice's arms.

He forgot Mary, he forgot the hospital, he forgot everything in a sudden blaze of anger. What the devil was this all about? The old pattern, sordid and distasteful, the snickering, smoking room story: "Have you heard the one about the boss and his secretary? Well, it seems she came in and said—" Jenny. That red-headed kid whose legs had been too long and whose tongue was hinged . . . that crazy, bubbling-over brat, with her pigtailed and her freckles. . . . Gram's Jenny. His father's; and in a way, his.

But she wasn't a kid any longer. She was 20 years old. She knew the answers.

Did she know the answer to this one?

Well, what happens next? You go up and say, "Let her alone." You smack the guy on the button, you turn Jenny over your knee and paddle her. You shake her till her teeth rattle. You say, "You darn fool kid, do you know what you're getting into?"

No, you don't, not with a crippled right hand. You aren't up to Hathaway's weight or height. You aren't up to anything. And Jenny's too old to be spanked. Besides, it isn't your business, is it?

He was shaking with anger, frustration, and the awareness that everything had gone wrong . . . his home coming, the people he had left at home now altered irrevocably . . . his father, stubbornly hanging on, and fighting for every hour of time, the town itself, and now Jenny.

Chances of Pauley Gaining Senate O. K. Seen Better

GOP Makes Biggest Drive For Congress in 25 Years

Special to Central Press

WASHINGTON—The longer the Senate naval affairs committee continues its hearings on President Truman's nomination of Edwin W. Pauley to be undersecretary of the Navy, the better Pauley's chances of confirmation seem to be.

Another factor which may tip the scales in favor of the former Democratic national treasurer is ex-Interior Secretary Ickes' blast at the president.

Ickes' statement that on one occasion Mr. Truman did not tell the truth about Pauley is regarded as a vote winner for the California oil man.

Political observers pointed out that many Senate Democrats who have been in doubt about which way they would jump will think twice before saying "nay" to the nominee. A "nay" vote would be in effect a repudiation of the president's veracity.

Republicans are believed to be solidly against the nominee, but they will be unable to muster a sufficient majority to rebuff Mr. Truman, according to observers. Biggest guns against Pauley in the floor fight will be Senators Robert Taft (R) of Ohio, and Tobey (R) of New Hampshire, Pauley's principal antagonist in the hearings.

A voice vote confirmation of Robert E. Allen to be an RFC director is said to have further paved the way for a Pauley confirmation.

PROBABLY NOT SINCE 1932 have political considerations so dominated congressional actions, and from now until the November elections even more politics are in sight.

There are several reasons for this situation. One is that the end of the war has brought a sharp rebound of peace-time activities. Another is that the Republicans see a bigger chance now than they have had since the balmy days of 1928.

President Truman's troubles are grieved for the Republican political mill. They are capitalizing on Truman administration failures; the conflicts within the Democratic party and the public dissatisfaction with administration inaction in certain matters.

Republicans are putting on the biggest drive to win congressional seats that they have made probably in 25 years. They hope to capture control of the House next November and to come close to Democratic strength in the Senate.

If they succeed, they will prepare for the 1948 presidential contest with redoubled zest. Republicans are counting strongly on beating Mr. Truman if he is the Democratic nominee in that year. Democrats, meanwhile, are preparing for a hard defensive battle. They are going to fight harder than they have in years because the Republicans are going to fight harder to oust them from control of the government.

THE WEAR AND TEAR OF WAR was tougher on the minds than the bodies of the men who fought it.

This is indicated in a disclosure by Veterans' Administrator Omar Bradley that 43,019 ex-GIs are patients in VA neuropsychiatric hospitals.

That means that 57.5 per cent of all VA institution patients are "neuro" cases.

Convinced that most of the neurosis sufferers can be fitted for return to normal life, Bradley has organized an advisory committee of 22 top specialists to help solve VA neuropsychiatric problems.

Bradley recruited Drs. Henry Brozin, psychiatry professor at the University of Chicago; Henry Wolfman, Mayo clinic; Karl M. Bowman, University of California, president of the American Psychiatric association, and Walter Schaller, San Francisco, president of the American Psychological association.

Bradley also is credited with the "skyscraper" hospital idea. He recommended this for hospital sites for which there was insufficient acreage for construction. It bids fair to revolutionize hospital architecture.

Infantile Paralysis Collection Nets $1300

Approximately $1300 was realized in the Infantile Paralysis drive which was sponsored by the Business and Professional Women's club the report of which was read by Mrs. Harriett Hennis, chairman, at the meeting of that organization in their club rooms, Masonic Temple, Thursday evening. Thirty members and guests were present.

Miss Rose Good and Mrs. George Green were in charge of the meeting to which each member was permitted to bring a guest. For the program Miss Good introduced Mrs. Blanche Motesman, who gave a talk on her experiences as a member of the WACS. Mrs. Motesman who was the first woman to join the service from Circleville served in camps at Des Moines, Iowa, Daytona Beach, Fla., and at Camp Edwards, near Boston. She also studied finance at a school conducted at Camp Atterbury, Ind.

Miss Barbara Greene sang a solo accompanied by Miss Donna Reed at the piano. Miss Reed also played two piano solos.

At the business meeting Mrs. Hennis told the members that of the total amount realized in the Infantile Paralysis drive, $685.38 was realized through contributions and collected in boxes throughout the city. Collections in the theaters total $604.50.

Upon the request of Miss Elizabeth Hilyard, president, for volunteers to assist in the Red Cross Drive starting March 1, several responded.

WOMEN'S GROUP HAS TOPIC ON BROTHERLY LOVE

"Brotherly Love" was the theme of the meeting Thursday evening when Group H of the Women's Association of the Presbyterian church met at the home of Mrs. George Steeley, East Main street.

Devotionals were given by Mrs. Melvin Yates who read a series of Scripture verses, all dealing with brotherly love. The prayer which followed was for our missionaries in Africa.

Mrs. Adrian Yates read an article from "Women and Missions." This stressed the fact that all men are brothers and that in spite of all the recent strife in the world that if we'll remember this relationship that there is hope for us yet.

A short business session followed with Mrs. Loring Evans in charge.

As assistant hostess, acting in place of her mother, Mrs. E. W. Lutz, who was unable to be present, Mrs. Adrian Yates presented Mrs. Beulah Madison of the local Red Cross who told of the work of that organization in a way that was both interesting and instructive. Beginning by stressing the fact that we must not relax, that the work of the Red Cross continues even though actual war is ended, she reviewed the various activities of the local chapter, including such services to the overseas soldiers as setting up recreation centers, the activities of the mobile units and the USO shows; also the more personal service of answering the inquiries of the boys concerning the welfare of their families here at home, as well as helping settle allowance difficulties.

CHURCH FAMILY CIRCLE MARKS 3rd ANNIVERSARY

A cooperative supper was enjoyed by ninety members of the Lutheran Family Circle Thursday evening when they met at the Lutheran Parish House for the monthly meeting which marked the third anniversary of the existence of that organization.

Decorations on several large cakes placed on the long table from which the guests were served reminded them of the anniversary. The Rev. and Mrs. George Troutman and Mr. and Mrs. Emerson Martin were responsible for the decorations of the tables.

Mrs. Gladden Troutman, president opened the meeting with group singing which was followed by responsive reading of the 119th psalm. The Rev. Troutman led the group in prayer. The topic for discussion was "Juvenile Delinquency" given in a paper by Mrs. Russell Skaggs who led the general discussion that followed.

During the business meeting Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Cline and Russell Skaggs were admitted as new members of the group.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Leist and Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Sieverta were in charge of the program which followed. Mr. Leist introduced each number on the program. Recitations were given by Walter Sieverta, Eddie Walters, Barbara Sieverta, David Hammel, Johnnie Troutman.

Musical numbers were two songs by Joyce Troutman and a trumpet solo by Jimmie Bartholomew.

When Harry W. Flannery interviewed Dr. Arthur G. During the war, said Coons, all of the country's chemical industries were converted to war purposes, thus stopping the production of fertilizer. Now, before food can be grown in quantity, the plants have to be reconverted to make the vital ammonium sulphates and phosphates without which Japanese agriculture cannot survive.

$550,000 Water Bond Issue Will Be Proposed Before Council

ADKINS, RENICK READY DETAILS OF ORDINANCE

City Counsel Return From Chicago With Full Data On Plant Purchase

An ordinance authorizing a $550,000 bond issued to finance the purchase of the Circleville water system will be presented for passage at next Tuesday night's meeting of the Circleville city council.

This was disclosed Friday by Attorney Joseph W. Adkins, Jr. He and Attorney Thomas Renick, special counsel for the city in negotiations for the buying of the water system, returned Thursday from Chicago, Ill., where they conferred with engineers and bonding companies relative to the project.

Water Softener Included
Members of the city council discussed the proposed water system purchase in executive session at the last council meeting held the night of Feb. 19. The matters discussed included the amount of the suggested bond issue and the types of improvements proposed.

The ordinance to be presented for passage Tuesday night will provide for the purchase of the water system at a price of $460,000. The remainder of the bonds, amounting to $90,000, would be sold later—provided the ordinance is passed—to finance the installation of a water softening system. The exact type of water softening equipment is as yet unspecified. Samples of Circleville water will be sent monthly to Chicago for chemical analysis in order to aid in determining the most suitable type of water softening equipment.

Attorney Adkins said that the $550,000 bond issue is calculated to cover all costs of the water system project.

Ordinance Draft Under Way
Work is now under way, Attorney Adkins explained, in the drafting of the ordinance aimed to give Circleville a modern municipally-owned water system.

The question of a municipally-owned water system has been a bone of contention in Circleville for many years and Attorney Adkins asserted that the way has now been paved for the people of Circleville to own their own water system.

Further steps in the plans to purchase the water system from Ohio Water Service Co., were taken following condemnation proceedings last summer and fall in Pickaway County Common Pleas Court.

C. E. Mahaffey, principal at Ashville high school, showed two educational motion pictures at the meeting of the Sheriff's Auxiliary in the club room of Betz's Restaurant Thursday night.

The other film, consisted of several government shorts, including battle scenes that have now been released to the public after being made only for servicemen to study. One of the shorts, "Weapon of War," warned against Nazi race hatred poison.

He mentioned limestone and fertilizer as weapons in the war against poor soil. The progressive farmer studies all methods of soil conservation and is an asset to any community, he said.
